

7) DNR Release - In the event of a medical emergency, do you request CPR for your pet?
Yes No

8) Histopathology - Submission of Excised Masses or Samples

- Masses or tissue samples that are removed from your pet may be malignant. Without sending the biopsy sample to the lab, we cannot know whether or not this mass needs to be followed up on.
- Masses or tissue samples are submitted to an external laboratory (Antech), and results are returned usually 5 – 7 business days after submission.
- The first tissue sample costs $113, and subsequent samples cost $33.

YES, Submit the Mass(es) for Pathology, $113+
NO, do not submit any masses for pathology
My pet is not having a mass removed

9) Dental Cleaning – Tooth Extractions

- When dental cleanings are performed, the tartar and debris that is cleared away can reveal abnormalities that were previously unable to be seen. The veterinarian is then also able to fully and carefully examine all teeth. This allows us to determine the health of teeth and whether or not there is need for extraction.
- Unhealthy teeth that are left in the mouth, can cause pain or abscesses. This can be prevented by having your veterinarian extract any teeth that are deemed mobile or unhealthy.
- The cost of a tooth extraction varies depending on the amount of time that is required to remove it safely. The costs will range from $9 – 129. We cannot determine how long an individual tooth will take before extraction.
- If the veterinarian does not have permission to extract teeth without contacting you first, please have your phone available. If you do not answer the call, the veterinarian reserves the right to determine whether or not it is medically necessary to extract teeth to avoid a second anesthetic procedure and doing the needed extractions on a different day.
- Dental XRays can provide information for the veterinarian that allows them to determine the health of a tooth and its roots. Dental XRays cost $30, and may be performed by the veterinarian in cases that are deemed medically necessary.
